Dear Mr. Barnes:

This is in responses to your correspondence to the Housing and Civil Enforcement Section of the United States Department of Justice alleging JP Morgan Chase is engaged in racially discriminatory lending practices based on your analysis of HMDA data. We understand you have also contacted the Consumer Financial Protection Board (CFPB) concerning these allegations. We apologize for the delay in this response.

This office has the responsibility with other federal agencies for enforcement of federal fair lending laws, including the Equal Credit Opportunity Act, 15 U.S.C. §1691, et seq., (ECOA) and the Fair Housing Act, 42 U.S.C. §3601, et seq. (FHA). These laws prohibit discrimination in lending based upon race, color, national origin, religion, sex, familial status, age, or disability.

The fair lending laws give the federal banking regulators, including the CFPB, jurisdiction to investigate complaints of lending discrimination and to make a referral to the Department of Justice based on their findings. The Department of Justice also has the ability to bring an action without a referral. In either case, the Department of Justice has authority to act only when there is information indicating that an establishment is engaged in a pattern or practice of discrimination. A pattern or practice of discrimination requires a showing that discriminatory activity is the standard operating procedure of a lending institution -- the regular rather than the unusual practice. Such a pattern or practice is usually proved by evidence that there have been several discriminatory incidents at the institution, or that it has a policy of discrimination. HMDA data provides one way that the Department can evaluate whether a lender has engaged in a pattern or practice of discrimination.

Thank you for bringing your analysis to our attention. We have reviewed the information provided in your correspondence concerning JP Morgan Chase. We are unable to keep you updated regarding the status of any investigation we may undertake in response to your complaint.

Sincerely,

Steven H. Rosenbaum

Chief
